I forward this to our folks for distribution. Office closed today, but they usually send out job postings about once a week to our student and alumni lists.

Professor Burroughs,

I hope you're having a great week! I came across an opportunity that I wanted to pass along. A good friend and former donor of mine, Allan Cors, is looking to hire a fulltime fundraiser for the Americans in Wartime Museum (<http://www.nmaw.org/>) located just outside of Quantico, VA. This project is in its second phase and he is looking for someone who is an experienced major gifts fundraiser and would be interested in working with him to secure support. They have about $3m in assets and over a million in committed in pledges. There is a current donor list/database (both individuals and corporations) that can be cultivated, and this person will be primarily focused on building networks and closing major gifts for the museum.

Museum Vision The Museum inspires visitors by enabling them to experience military vehicles, explore artifacts, and participate in reenactments and special programs ...

I have worked with Allan for many years and there truly is not a better person out there. This would be a remarkable opportunity for anyone who is a seasoned major gifts fundraiser, interested in military history and represents the values of the organization. He is willing to pay a very competitive salary to help ensure he gets the right person in the position. He is open minded and I believe he would be willing to consider any candidates that would be a good fit and can get the job done.

If you know of anyone who may be interested, I would love to connect with them.

Thanks so much,

Nicole
